

Abstract:

Process for measuring a substance in solutions without first having to selectively label the molecule which is to be measured. The process makes it possible to determine the quantity of the substance, and to measure catalysed reactions which lead to the modification of the substance. The process makes it possible to test whether a substance modulates a catalysed reaction or not. The process can be used in High Throughput Screening.